THE depth of poverty into which many of think, his father is better off with the few dollars the people of the neighbouring Colony Macao are plunged is truly deplorable. How some of them contrive to exist is a mystery. No doubt they have solved the problem of how to sustain life on the smallest possible quantity of food, and many of them only just manage to live. The professional beggars fare the best, of course; those poor souls who are too proud to solicit charity have to bear the pangs of hunger in silence. Mr. Caldwell (from Mr. Brereton's office) ap-It is distressing to think that so many people should be living in a chronic condition of want. It is rather astonishing, too, that the Government at Macao does with six children live in the same house, and also not make some effort to promote emigration. It might be difficult, perhaps, for them to compete with the Chinese in this Colony in the various handicrafts, but surely not impossible, and there is no reason why the effort should not be made. Honest labour must always be preferable to starvation or to subsisting on alms. We should be glad to hear of any scheme ployment or to enable them to seek their fortunes elsewhere.

. The Whitehall Review, referring to the recent forgery of Lord Charles Beresford's name by his Chinase servant, says :- "Any one who has visited the Celestial Empire must be well aware of the strange facility with which the Chinaman Editor, not for publication, but as evidence of good can copy. Give him a likeness of a friend, and he will bring back a fac-simile, while, to send a coat with a patch on it as a pattern by which a native tailor shall make another, means that the now one will also have a patch unless special instructions are given for that part of the work to be omitted. This being so, many have been surprised at Lord Charles Beresford's carelessness in letting his Celestial, Tom Fat, have the entire charge of his cheque book. The confiding nature of 'Charley' Berestord is well known in the Service, and his 'fist' may be none of the plainest; but it was too much to give a heathen, who was so excellent a penman, the power to fill up cheques. Tom Fut was dear at his price, and, we he took for him than with so ingenious a son."

was wholly unprepared. A sense of danger has been at last awakened. Yet a number of persons, headed by the men of the Manchester school, persist in thinking there is no contingency worth fighting for. Undisturbed posed is doubtless the hope of the future; but the realisation of that hope supposes in every powerful nation a general enlightenment such as is now the privilege of only a few educated individuals in some countries. As long as this general enlightenmont has not become a fact such a notion is impracticable, onesided, and ruinous. It deprives the best part of mankind of the superiority it ought to possess, and transfers it to the other part. The State that has been self-complacent enough to believe that it runs no kind of danger in thus living some centuries in advance of pre- On Bombay. -Bank, sight. sent times finds itself at a critical moment with.

out allies and without proper preparation Force is still the only source of mestige noknowledged in the world at large, especially in Asia. Moderation is looked upon as a sign of weakness; unscrapulous ambition is reverenced. If your neighbour is a bully, however gentle you are, you will be obliged to come to Mows, either after allowing him to smite all the small peaceful neighbours and to enlist against yourself the smaller bullies or before; the latter is certainly the more advisable course. Force carries everything along with it. Until Rocroy, Spanish fashions, language, and ideas were generally adopted in Europe. From Rooroy to Waterlee the French enjoyed the same supremacy. From Waterloo to Solan England had it all her own way, and her trade accordingly flourished. Nelson and Wellington have helped to sell more Sheffield razors than all the commercial travellers of the place. Disuse of force by England would sooner or later be followed by general disase of English wares; an awkward consequence enough, with such a large industrial population. But a much sadder result would be the lessened influence of English ideas.

was sanguine of victory. The true friends of penes should wish the most peace loving nation to be the most powerful. When Russia and England come into contact—either-immediately nt each other's frontiers, or mediately by struggle for influence on intervening Statesthere will be war if Russia feels stronger, and there will not be war if strength is on the side of England.

Russia has hitherto shown a wonderful power of assimilation. However difficult the conquest of a province, its people have never afterwards been able to shake off their allegiance; willingly Thermometer attached 54.5 01.0 or unwillingly, they have contributed their full quota towards the exchequer and the army: a very serious consideration, bearing in mind that Force on one side there is a compact and growing, ter- Dry Themometer..... ritory, with 80,000,000 souls uniformly subjected. to conscription, and on the other a scattered empire, where the uppermost race is a small minority free from conscription; the battle-fields being for the former near home and for the latter

Egypt and the Suez Canal command the best military route to India, because there is no transhipment. If this particular route could for ever be secured it would be folly to fight for securing another. But it is not disputed that if Russia conquers Armenia there is but a step thence to Syria; and with Syria at her devotion the road by Suez becomes extremely precarious. If England were to annex Egypt certainly the danger would be avoided of a future Egyptian ruler becoming either powerful enough to defy England or weak enough to be at the mercy of the rivals of England. But, in the first place, to preserve this acquisition would be costly and difficultcostly, because of the vast extent to be occupied difficult, because of the scanty population to be pressed into army service on an emergency; and also on account of the topographical features of the land. In the second instance, since the opening of the Suez Canal, Egypt has been considered as a country that ought to be held practically, if not formally, neutral. By seizing it or interfering with it too openly England would create universal jealousies, and alienate every hope of the moral support she needs. England has no interest whatever in South-Eastern Europe, and can safely abstain from any prepared to GRANT POLICIES against FIRE active steps in that quarter. Pile question will to the extent of $40,000 on Buildings or on have to be settled chiefly between the States and Goods stored therein. provinces that lie thereabouts-Turkey and Russia, Austria and Germany, Servia, Roumania Li. as Mr. Gladstone advised, England had sought to favour the oppressed Christian populations, her labours would have been in vain. All their gratitude would have belonged to Russia, whose influence would have been there paramount. Some think that timely action of that sort would have prevented the war. Although that assumptio might be controverted, it is useless to discuss it. Now that war has been going on for months the only motive for action in those parts has disappeared.

In the final settlement, however, England must have a voice, but without evincing too strong a bias, and barely as a means of ensuing the sanction, by a general treaty, of her own interests and acquisitions. In order to be thus and then consulted, she must have been acting elsewhere. The military position which England should covet is the valley of the Euphrates and that of the Tigris, with such a part of Syria as would secure at least one port on the Mediterranean, the portion of Armenia annexed including a good natural boundary-as, for instance, the mountains which limit the watersheds of both rivers. This dominion ought not to be a mere military HELD FOR POSITIVE ASSURERS BY TRUSTEES outpost like Gibraltar and Malta; but a large territory with resources of its own, of a value warranting the amount of expense necessary to To the 3rd Quarter ended 30th September, 1877. create formidable strongholds on the Mediterra nean and on the Persian Gulf, as well as on the highlands, in order that, in a great war it might everywhere hold out a reasonable length of time without succour. The natives, a fine intelligent race, well seeing that the last honr is about to strike for the Ottoman Empire, feeling that their want of unity and leadership precludes them from aspiring to independence, would prefer the enlightened rule of England to the iron tyranny of Russia, which they see at work on their borders. They would become most valuable allies during the process of annexation, and useful servents and fellow-subjects in future eventualities. Thus would be secured the second read to India, of which a Select Committee of the House of Commons declared in 1872 that it would be highly desirable; the first road—i.e. that by Egypt—being also secured spec facto, as Syris could never then be conquered by Russia or held on Russia's sufferance, and as the Suez Canal would be under the control of England and the guarantee of Europe.

in this mauner, and in this manner only, would the question of supremacy in Asia be definitively set at rest. Russia must evidently have to stop some day in her career of annexation; yelmeanwhile, if the continues to show hersel ambitious, unscrupulous, greedy, while lingland persists in the innocence of moderation, she will wield an overwholming infinence on the smaller neighbouring States, such as Persia, Afghanistan, and the imperfectly assimilated States of Northern India. So many little bullies, abetted by the big one, may eventually prove too much even for the energy of Englishmen. It is far more prudent to enlist the neutrality,

It is not perhaps, inexpedient to repeat that or perhaps the alliance, of those weak States acquiring a position which is unrivalled in the world for military purposes; a position which England, not only on account of India, but on the Board account also of the English-speaking com munities of Australia and South Eastern Africaas the connecting link between them all and the mother country-must make up her mind never to allow to be possessed by any strong Power IMPERIAL FIRE INSURANCE COMother than herself .- Pall Mall Gazette.

since February I had been receiving several anonymous letters sent through the ordinary post, with various post-marks, all warning me, as a friend to natives, to take furlough to Eugland and join my family, and leave the district to its fate. They were worded mostly in this way:—  "Although you have many friends, and the people worship you, have still enemies and you will approach you when the time comes, and you will never know who strikes you down."  All these letters were marked "private," or "to be read by himself," and, like other are extent of $20,000.  BATAVIA SEA AND FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY. It will work effects such as nothing else will produce, and it possesses the great advantage of not causing, when its use is relinquished, the elightest reaction or depression.  CAUTION.—Phosphorus is sometimes sold in the form of Pills and Lozenges; it should be generally known that every form where solid particles of Phosphorus are in combination is dangerous. It is therefore necessary that the public should be cautioned against the use of any form of Phosphorus not perfectly soluble in water.  M. enough, I had read them and then torn them up. I had not the smallest fear of the people in my district; but these letters, taken in connection with those which had been sent confidentially to Lord Elphinstone, had more effect upon me than I cared to acknowledge.  The advent of 1914 had been proceded by frightful cholera and floods in Bengal, discontent about the greased cartridges, and the mutiny of the 19th Bengal Native Infantry, but such events seeemed to have no possible connection with the general uprising of the	PROTECTED BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT, Dated October 11th, 1869 UNDER DISTINGUISHED PATEONAGE. suspicious of infringements of caste, what could that possibly have to do with the peaceful and apparently loyal farmers of the Deccan?  In Bengal, however, there now/appeared to be real alarm. Lord Canning's proclamation of May 16, proved that there was, as there seemed to me to be, direct sympathy between what the people of Bengal were warned of by Lord Canning and what I knew was being felt all around me.
